

CAVEMAN CLOSE-UP

By MIKE ROSENBERG

That the Cavemen have the talent to be the '60-'61 State Champions was exemplified by the manner in which they defeated Lovington, Rio Grande, and Santa Fe. However, when they played other squads, teams like Hobbs and Clovis, they seemingly fell apart at the seams—throwing away the games with bad passes, missed free throws, and minor infractions.

The team has talent, speed, height, and desire. But it lacks class—the cool, calm style of a winner. The squad doesn't take advantage of free throws, fast breaks, or quick leads. The boys have blown games to teams with less talent who won simply by making a decent percentage of free throws in comparison to the C-Men's 40-50 percent. Leads have been lost by wild passing time and again. They have missed lay-ups which eventually meant the difference in the game.

Coaches Bowyer and Stell realize the team's faults—and they have drilled the Cavemen in an attempt to correct them. As always, the final decision rests with the boys. They know that they have the potential to win. The district tourney is their last opportunity to prove themselves to their all-patient coaches and their disappointed followers.

The Pow Wow Sports Department has been distinguished by the employment of the state's number one sports artist, John Andrews, throughout the past year. Johnny's work, which includes this issue's "Sam Etcheverry," has been remarkable. His drawings have been admired by high school newspaper editors all over New Mexico, and this writer is appreciative of John's outstanding contributions to the Pow Wow sports pages.

During the Christmas holidays I journeyed to El Paso for the annual Sun Bowl Classic and was gratified by the performance of our state's pride—the New Mexico State Aggies—in their triumph over

In a post-game interview with winning coach Warren Woodson, I realized how truly soft-spoken and easy-going this famous mentor is. He naturally was jubilant about his come-from-behind victory, and his praise for his All-American Pervis Atkins along with his team-mates Charley Johnson and Bob Gaiters was more than generous. However, he was exceptionally proud of ex-Caveman, Bob Kelly. He commented about every play that Kelly made—and he pointed out that players like Bob were evidence of Coach Ralph Bowyer's superior coaching staff and gridiron methods.

He ended the interview by saluting Bowyer as "one coach in a million," and by expressing hopes that more products of Carlsbad would soon be playing at New Mexico State.

About three weeks later, Woodson was unanimously elected "Coach of the Year—1960" by the United Press International.

Spring Sports are quickly approaching as the track field, baseball diamond, golf course, and tennis courts are stirring with activity. Such stars as John Wilkinson, Max Grant, Rocky Trapp and Jim Ground will soon be in the headlines—and the thrill of watching an exciting outdoor sport is not too far off.

Carlsbad's "Slingin' Sam" Etcheverry, the hero of Canadian football, granted this reporter a special interview during his short stay in his home town. Etcheverry commented on his desire to play football in the U.S., and that the tide in his current fight with the Canadian Football League has seemingly swung his way.

Before he left, Sam gave a short pep talk to the basketball squad concerning spirit and perseverance, and the team was very impressed by his confident and yet modest manner.

Etcheverry is slated to play for the St. Louis Cardinal pro football team this coming grid season, and at that time Carlsbad will have the privilege of sharing his superlative talents with the rest of the nation.

This column commends Don Harris and Dennis Wootan for performing well in their roles as Cavemen managers for 1960-61. They are holding to the "Kenzie Ahrens Tradition" of superior managership.

Cavemen Stalk Tigers In Season Finale As MacDonald And Monroe Clash Tonight

DESPITE LOSSES DAWGS SPIRIT IS MOST EVIDENT

The going has been rough for the 60-61 Dawgs, but the spirit of the team has never dwindled. Coach Arvel Stephens commented about the squad's particular predicament—that being the fact that the team consists mainly of sophomores in contrast to the junior-dominated "B" teams which which they have been up against.

Although the Dawgs are in the cellar in their district, Stephens remains fairly confident concerning their chances in the approaching district tournament. His attitude is based upon their constant improvement which they have gained over the course of the season.

The outstanding characteristic of this year's quintet is their spirit—a quality which is ever-present in Stephens-coached teams.

The top eight cagers are Don Gadbury, Dub Anderson, Arthur Humphrey, Dempsey Stripling, Ronnie Morton, Ernie Yarbro, Duane Parsons, and Charlie Stearns.

Arvel Stephens To Retire After Nineteenth Season

Arvel Stephens is in his last year as a mentor, retiring after 19 years of successful coaching.

Forty-nine years old, "Casey" leaves the sports scene with three championship Carlsbad teams behind him. After spending five years in the two junior highs, Stephens moved up to CHS. His three years at the helm of the Dawgs football squad stand out as years of triumph on the junior- varsity gridiron. Twice his teams have walked away with district championships—and he has always stimulated his players toward giving their all for the betterment of the team.

Two of Stephens' outstanding products are Virgil Grant and Curt Mize—cagers who owe their status as playmakers to the coaching methods of Coach Stephens. His tireless guidance developed these boys as well as numerous others who played under his watchful eye.

Stephens is retiring as a respected gentleman known for his capabilities in the handling of boys both on and off the field or court.

Heralded Sophomores In The Scoring Spotlight At C-Men Gym

Tonight the 1960-61 Caveman cagers take the court in Carlsbad's Crackerbox Gym for the final time. Alamogordo's Tigers, led by Ray MacDonald, finish their season against the C-Men as one of the top three squads in their district.

The game will match two of the most sensational sophomores in the state—Carlsbad's erratic Ben Monroe and the highly-touted MacDonald.

MacDonald is supported by several experienced basketballers, including his older brother.

Monroe is backed up by three senior stalwarts: Herman Hurd, Butch Anderson, and Gorio Hernandez. George Hurd is the fifth member of the starting five.

Bowyer's Battlers have had a successful season on their home court, winning six of their ten home games. Of the four losses, the biggest margin was 16 points in the Roswell contest. The other three defeats were by less than four points.

A capacity crowd is anticipated to view tonight's clash. Game time is 8 o'clock.

Probable Caveman Starters
Herman Hurd, Forward, 6-1
Gorio Hernandez, Forward, 6-0
Ben Monroe, Center, 6-2
Butch Anderson, Guard, 5-11
George Hurd, Guard, 5-8

The brother-act of Herman and George Hurd brings back memories of another great Caveman brother-duo: Bob and Dick Forrest.

Ex-Caveman great Tom Patty will be in a starting role as the Red Raiders of Texas Tech take on a tough schedule this year.

CAVEMEN WIND-UP CAGE PLAY WITH ELEVEN VICTORIES

The Cavemen won eleven of their first twenty-five games, finishing their district season with a four-win, eight-loss record. This is a brief recap of the season's highlights:

Cavemen 67, San Jon 65
The C-Men squeaked by the Coyotes in a thriller at Caveman Gym. George Hurd had his finest night, scoring 21 points. Monroe and H. Hurd added 18 and 12 points, respectively. Bobby Carter was the big gun for San Jon with 20 points.

Cavemen 53, Jefferson 50
Monroe led the Neanderthals with 24 counters, and he was backed up once again by Herman Hurd who scored 9. Jefferson was highly touted—and they went on to finish second in the tough Texas District 1-AAAA.

Hobbs Invitational Tourney
The Cavemen defeated Eunice, 46-45, in the tournament opener at Hobbs. Monroe's last second shot provided the difference. The CHS'ers lost their next two games to Hobbs and Lovington, and finished fourth in this holiday tourney.

Cavemen 70, Portales 45
Monroe (18 pts.) and Herman Hurd (13 pts.) led the onslaught of the Rams in Caveman Gym. The Blue-and-White were erratic, playing sub-par in the first half while shooting an amazing 64 percent in the second.

Clovis 64, Cavemen 62
